

Hawk Ridge Bird Observatory Traineeship Program Bird Banding Trainee Application

The Hawk Ridge Nature Reserve in Duluth, MN is well known for the fall bird migration. It's one of the best places in North America to observe large numbers of birds of great diversity migrating each fall. The Hawk Ridge Bird Observatory (HRBO) is the non-profit organization that manages and conducts bird research and education at the nature reserve. The mission of HRBO is to protect birds of prey and other migratory birds in the western Lake Superior region through research, education, and stewardship.

As part of its educational and conservation goals, HRBO is offering traineeships for those seeking hands-on professional experience to assist them in their pursuit of higher level education and/or career in a field consistent with HRBO's mission. Training will focus on the fall bird migration research and education at Hawk Ridge Nature Reserve. Training will be conducted by our managers with much knowledge and expertise in the field. This is a great experiential opportunity for trainees to learn from our best! Trainees will also complete a special project pertaining to their focus area that will be developed with their training supervisor. Trainees will be provided a stipend of $100 per week and lodging. In order to apply, trainees must be at least 18 years old, have a valid driver's license, and personal vehicle for transportation.

HRBO is currently seeking three Bird Banding Research Trainees for the 2018 fall migration season. The Bird Banding Traineeships will run from Friday, August 31st to Thursday, November 8th, 2018. The Bird Banding Traineeship primary goals are to learn all aspects of bird banding field techniques for both raptors (hawks and owls) and passerines (songbirds).
